Dear Friends,

As I reflect on my first six years as President of Ben-Gurion University of the Negev, I am struck by the extraordinary journey we have undertaken together. No one could have predicted the global, and local, upheaval we have faced. Yet BGU has not only endured but thrived.

And you have been a major contribution to our resilience.

Your steadfast support, your words of encouragement in difficult times, and your unwavering belief in BGU's mission have been a source of strength for me personally, and for our entire community. Since October 7, your heartfelt responses to my letters have reminded us that we are not alone. Through webinars, events, and gatherings — whether in Beer-Sheva or on visits to your communities in Canada, France, the UK, South Africa, Switzerland, Belgium, or the USA — you have demonstrated an unshakable commitment to BGU and to Israel.

Many of you have traveled to Israel, standing with us on the ground, offering not just words but action. Your generosity has enabled us to care for our students, faculty, and the wider Negev community during these difficult times. Through the success of our emergency campaign, you have ensured that we could support reservists, aid those impacted by trauma, and contribute meaningfully to Israel's national effort. And even as we navigate the present crisis, you continue to look ahead, remaining dedicated to our broader Way Forward global development campaign.

But the work is far from over.

As we rebuild and reimagine the future of the Negev, BGU will continue to rely on you — our global family — to help us not just recover but grow stronger than ever. The long-imagined North Campus is taking shape, with its first two academic buildings now towering over the construction site, along with the Student Village and the Infrastructure Building. Plans are underway for so much more in the North Campus, as well as in our Sde Boker and Eilat campuses. Yet there is still much to be done. Through your involvement and contributions, you are helping us drive forward groundbreaking research, world-class education, and transformative innovation.

Together, we are generating the future of Israel and the world.

Thank you for being an integral part of BGU's journey.

With deep appreciation,

Dear Friends,

We meet at a painful and pivotal moment in Israel's history and in Jewish history. In addition, countries throughout the world face dramatic and threatening challenges. It's a time of uncertainty, suffering, and stress.

Yet in the face of tremendous adversity, BGU's Global Development Committee is expanding and meeting important milestones. From the beginning, the Committee had two interconnected goals: to successfully meet BGU's financial goals and to expand the number of people and countries connected to BGU. We must accomplish these goals in order to guarantee that Ben-Gurion University will be on the leading edge of education in Israel and the world, and that Ben-Gurion University will be a major force in the redevelopment of the Negev.

On behalf of all the Global Development team, a big thank-you to all of you who have joined us in person at the Board of Governors meeting. The fact that you're here in person shows the depth of your commitment to BGU. Israelis continue to be remarkably resilient and strong, but knowing there is a large global community, standing with them, re-enforces the idea that the outcome will be positive.

One of the first programs the Global Development Committee created in 2022 was the Halutz program, sister program to A4BGU's Zin Fellows, which brings a group of about 15 people a year for a week-long exploration of Ben-Gurion University, the Negev, and Israel. This year the very successful Halutz IV trip was held from March 31–April 6. The new ideas, enthusiasm, and perspectives of the participants energized all of us. If you know someone who might be interested in applying for Halutz V, please contact your national associates organization.

With the help of our sixty plus Halutz graduates, BGU has strengthened and expanded connections with countries which have supported BGU for decades and has led to the creation of new chapters. Thanks to the efforts of the Global Development team and the generosity of donors of all sizes throughout the world, after four and a half years, our Way Forward campaign is ahead of pace in meeting our ambitious goal of $1 billion.

Several Halutz graduates are here at the BOG meetings. Please introduce yourself to them and let yourself be inspired.

The focus of the Global Development Committee is on the future. We believe that the more we expand our global community, the better we will understand the challenges Israel faces, and the more likely we are to discover universal values and new ways forward. We welcome you to join us in any capacity that works for you.

With thanks,

Toni Young,
Chair, Global Development Committee

Dear Friends,

There are moments when words feel inadequate — this is one of them. Over the past year, as Israel faced immense challenges, you — our friends and supporters in 14 countries — have stood by us in ways both humbling and inspiring.

Ben-Gurion University of the Negev has always turned challenges into action, and this year that mission has felt more urgent than ever. More than 6,500 students — over 30% of our student body — left their studies to serve in the IDF reserves, putting their futures on hold to defend their country. Because of your generosity they returned to a university ready to support them. That is the power of community.

I have been privileged to visit several of your countries, meeting those who have embraced BGU's mission. I have attended galas, spoken at parlor meetings, and introduced you to students whose personal stories are truly heroic. Time and again, I have witnessed your unwavering dedication — not just in giving, but in bringing others into this circle of support. Every conversation, event, and introduction you make is an act of faith in what BGU represents: a belief that Israel's future depends on the young minds we educate today.

That future is already taking shape. In our labs, students are working on breakthroughs that may one day cure diseases once thought incurable. On our campuses, young entrepreneurs are developing ideas that will change industries and lives. In our classrooms, future leaders are preparing to guide

Israel toward renewal and resilience. Our Zin and Halutz leadership programs are also cultivating the next generation of BGU supporters, many following in their families' footsteps.

Your support has been even more meaningful as Jewish communities worldwide face rising antisemitism. At a time when turning inward might have seemed easier, you reached outward. The bond between Israel and Jewish communities abroad has never been more vital, and BGU has served as a bridge connecting us all.

A well-known Talmudic phrase states, "Kol Yisrael arevim zeh bazeh" — all of Israel are responsible for one another. This past year, we have embodied this principle in profound ways. Jewish tradition also teaches us that even in darkness, we must seek the first glimmer of light. You have been that light for us, reminding our students and faculty that they are not alone — that people across the world believe in them and their success.

As we reach the midpoint in our decade-long Way Forward Campaign, we are ahead of pace but will not rest. With your continued support, we will exceed our ambitious $1 billion goal — because the work we are doing matters now more than ever.

With appreciation and warmest regards,

Jeff Kaye

With a Little Help from Our Friends

Philanthropy is more than just giving — it is an expression of shared values, a belief in a better future, and a testament to the power of human connections. At BGU, every donation, no matter its size, embodies a story of generosity, vision, and commitment. It is through the kindness of our friends and supporters that BGU continues to thrive, transforming lives, strengthening communities, and advancing groundbreaking research. Each act of giving, whether large or small, financial or otherwise, drives the momentum that sustains and propels the University forward.

These are just a few of the human stories behind the numbers, the individuals who exemplify the spirit of giving and the profound impact of their contributions.

Honoring a Hero's Memory

On December 26, 2023, Major Shay Shamriz, a 26-year-old company commander in the Nahal Brigade, fell in battle in northern Gaza. In response to his tragic death, Shay's soldiers took the initiative to establish a scholarship in his honor, rallying fellow soldiers to contribute to the fund.

The Shamriz family connection to BGU is deeply personal — Shay's parents, Daniella and Shaul, met while studying at BGU. His sister, Smadar, graduated last year, and no doubt Shay himself would have become a BGU student after completing his IDF service.

Shay's friends travelled in North America and told people his story. The response was overwhelming. What began as small donations — $18, $20, $100 — grew into a lasting tribute. Last year, the fund provided four scholarships for BGU students who had served in the Nahal Brigade. At the moving scholarship ceremony, Shay's family gathered with friends, fellow soldiers and scholarship recipients to celebrate his life.

This year, the Major Shay Shamriz Memorial Scholarship Fund will sponsor five scholarships, ensuring that his legacy lives on and continues to inspire future generations.

A Gift of Practicality

Sometimes, the most memorable contributions are not monetary, but practical.

This story goes back almost four decades, when finances were very tight. Israel and the University were going through a financial crisis in the late eighties, and this offer made sense. We recently discovered a letter addressed and faxed to Yisrael Ben Amitai, the University's first Director General, which mentioned Conrad Sandler, who sadly passed away earlier this year. The fax, dated 1989, from Michael Sonnenfeldt, noted that Conrad Sandler, Director of the Ben-Gurion University Foundation in the UK, BOG member, and a leader in the architectural ironmongery industry, while attending the Board of Governors meeting, had offered to upgrade all of the building hardware (door locks, hinges, etc.). The letter reminded Ben Amitai to send him a complete set of building plans. At the time of writing, the final outcome of this offer remains unknown. Yet this act serves as a testament to the many ways individuals have supported, and continue to support BGU beyond traditional donations.

A Legacy Illuminated

For Keila and Mila Abadi, philanthropy is a family tradition. Their grandmother, Navah Rubenzadeh, President of the Argentinian Friends of BGU, instilled in them a deep commitment to giving. When the Argentinian Friends held an event titled The Free World Against Terrorism, including a Hanukkah candle lighting ceremony, the girls saw an opportunity to contribute in a meaningful way.

“Since I was young, I have been aware of my grandmother’s philanthropic work and her deep connection with Israel,” Keila shared. “I want to follow in her footsteps and, with the same dedication and effort, do my part to help in any way I can. So, together with my mother and sister, we decided to make candles as a symbol of hope and peace.”

Keila and Mila sold the candles at the event to raise funds, demonstrating the reward and power of acts of giving.

A Teacher’s Gratitude

For Michael Singer, a dedicated American schoolteacher, his visit to BGU was a transformative experience — one that left such an impression that he felt compelled to give back. Though, as a teacher, he was unable to give on the scale of previous generations, he wanted to demonstrate his support.

I needed to thank you for the work you and the University do, and the hospitality you showed me that day I visited. That day was one of the most important days of my life.

“Jeff, I’m glad you were notified,” he wrote in response to a thank-you letter from the University. “As a school teacher, I am not in the position of making the kinds of donations my parents and grandparents have made. However, I needed to thank you for the work you and the University do, and the hospitality you showed me that day I visited. That day was one of the most important days of my life. Thank you and your team again. I pray for you guys.”

His modest words serve as a reminder that giving is about the intent, the appreciation, and the belief in something greater than oneself.

Lifelong Ties to BGU

Longtime donor Fred Levinson, now 97, and his wife Marlene, from San Francisco, have been staunch supporters of BGU for over 40 years. In 1948, Fred volunteered to serve in the Haganah, even spending time with David Ben-Gurion. Pictured here with fellow volunteers and Ben-Gurion, Fred later served on the national board of Americans for BGU. His generosity endures, as he continues to donate a fixed sum annually, demonstrating his unwavering commitment to the University.

The Ripple Effect of Giving

Our friends and supporters form a global family, bound together by a shared belief in education, research, and progress. Every contribution, whatever its form, shapes BGU's future. Giving makes you part of something greater, fueling knowledge, innovation, and opportunity in the Negev, Israel, and beyond. And, as these stories prove, sometimes all it takes is a little help from our friends.

Leading the Way Forward

For over 50 years, Ben-Gurion University of the Negev has embodied the pioneering spirit of Israel's founding father, David Ben-Gurion. More than an academic institution, BGU is the beating heart of the Negev — fueling innovation, driving economic growth, and shaping the leaders of tomorrow. Through the Way Forward, an ambitious ten-year $1 billion global campaign, the University is strengthening its role as a global research powerhouse, ensuring a thriving, resilient future for the Negev, Israel, and the world.

A Historic Turning Point

The events of October 7, 2023, reshaped Israel's landscape, leaving communities across the Negev facing unprecedented challenges. At this pivotal moment, BGU stands as a beacon of resilience and community responsibility, driving research and innovation with unwavering determination. By expanding infrastructure, enhancing student access, and advancing research excellence, the Way Forward campaign will transform BGU into a world-leading hub of research and innovation, while restoring vitality to the Negev. As President Prof. Daniel Chamovitz stated, "In the wake of the October 7 tragedy, BGU's dual calling — to foster cutting-edge research and build the Negev — is clearer than ever."

A Global Effort, A United Community

The Way Forward is more than just a fundraising effort — it is a call to unite BGU's global community. Everyone's contribution is meaningful. Whether through a major philanthropic gift, a modest contribution, involvement in our associate organizations, or advocacy, each act of support strengthens the University's mission and impact. This campaign is not only about securing financial resources; it is about deepening connections, forging new friendships, and reinforcing the ties that bind BGU supporters around the world. The Way Forward is about fundraising and friend-raising, ensuring that every individual who believes in the future of the Negev can play a meaningful role in shaping it.

Fueling Innovation and Discovery

BGU has long been at the forefront of groundbreaking research — from cybersecurity to climate resilience and biomedical advances. The campaign will fund cutting-edge laboratories, interdisciplinary research centers, and cross-sector collaborations to develop transformative solutions for regional and global challenges.

Empowering Students, Strengthening Communities

Students are the Negev's future. The Way Forward campaign will expand scholarships and enable a comprehensive framework of support that includes mental health services and financial aid, ensuring every talented student can thrive — regardless of background. By providing state-of-the-art facilities and academic opportunities, BGU is cultivating the next generation of innovators, entrepreneurs, and community leaders who will shape Israel's tomorrow.

A Call to Action

David Ben-Gurion once declared, "The future of Israel lies in the Negev." That future depends on us. Your support for the Way Forward campaign is more than an investment in BGU — it is an investment in resilience, progress, and hope. Together, we can forge a path forward that transforms challenges into opportunities and ensures that the Negev continues to flourish.

A Legacy of Impact

The Joyce and Irving Goldman Family Foundation

As Ben-Gurion University's Faculty of Health Sciences and medical school celebrate their 50th anniversary, we proudly acknowledge the extraordinary contributions of the Goldman family of New York. Their unwavering support has played a pivotal role in the school's continued success, as well as in other key university initiatives beyond the health sciences. We extend our deepest gratitude to these exceptional friends.

The Joyce and Irving Goldman Family Foundation was established by Irving Goldman,

Irving and Joyce Goldman, 1961

a WWII veteran and successful real estate entrepreneur, to honor his late wife and uphold his commitment to philanthropy.

Through the Goldman Family Foundation, Joyce and Irving's children — Lloyd Goldman (current Chair of BGU's Board of Governors), Katja Goldman-Sonnenfeldt, and Dorian Goldman (Chair of the Joyce and Irving Goldman Family Foundation) — have ensured the ongoing development and excellence of Ben-Gurion University of the Negev. The Goldmans' engagement with BGU began in 1983, with a modest contribution toward scholarships. Within a little over a decade the Foundation had become a major donor, actively shaping the medical school's future. In 2014, the Goldman name was inscribed upon the President's Pillars, in recognition of their transformative generosity.

A Revolutionary Approach to Medical Education

BGU's medical school, which welcomed its first class in 1974, was originally known as the "Beer-Sheva Experiment." Its mission was groundbreaking: to revolutionize medical education with innovative admission procedures, and a pedagogy that emphasized a holistic approach, treating patients as embedded in their specific social and cultural contexts. Many aspects of this pioneering model have since been adopted across Israel and around the world — making the experiment a resounding success.

By the mid-1990s, the Faculty of Health Sciences was in increasing demand, training a growing number of health professionals in a range of disciplines to serve both the Negev and the nation at large. However, this growth coincided with major government budget cuts and the enactment of the National Health Insurance Law, requiring the Faculty to reassess its future direction. This period of uncertainty made it clear that strategic planning was essential to ensure the continued success of BGU's medical school and the healthcare system it supported.

Naming Ceremony for the Joyce and Irving Goldman Medical School, 1996 (L-R): Michael Sonnenfeldt, Dorian Goldman, Former President of the State of Israel Shimon Peres, Katja Goldman-Sonnenfeldt, Avishai Braverman (then President of BGU), and Lloyd Goldman

The Partnership That Transformed a Medical School

At this point, the Joyce and Irving Goldman Family Foundation stepped in with a substantial donation to the medical school, but sought a comprehensive development plan to ensure the most effective use of this support. This led to the creation of an advisory committee comprised of Goldman family representatives, alongside prominent scientists, clinicians and educators. The committee was to serve not only as a guiding body but also as a formal review board, the International Academic Review Committee (IARC).

In June 1996, the medical school was named the Joyce and Irving Goldman Medical School, officially marking the beginning of a unique and deeply engaged relationship. Through the annual IARC meetings in Beer-Sheva, the family has remained actively involved in the school's strategic planning, academic programming, and long-term vision.

"The meetings of the IARC provide a dynamic and effective platform for discussing key strategies that promote medical education and research. The Committee's insights are invaluable as we advance our mission to provide outstanding medical education for future generations," says Prof. Reli HersHKovitz, Dean of the Faculty of Health Sciences.

Every few years, the IARC strategic task force meets to define broader goals and identify areas where intervention is most needed. This ensures that BGU's medical school continues to educate top-tier health professionals and deliver quality healthcare to the Negev's residents.

Prof. HersHKovitz speaks for the entire BGU community in saying, "We are deeply grateful for the contributions, unwavering leadership and support of the Goldman Family, whose commitment is instrumental to our Faculty's ongoing success."

The enduring partnership between Ben-Gurion University of the Negev and the Joyce and Irving Goldman Family Foundation is a testament to the power of visionary philanthropy, shaping the future of healthcare education and strengthening Negev communities for generations to come.

Halutz and the Power of Connection

We recently welcomed the fourth cohort of BGU's Halutz Initiative for Global Leadership for an intensive and transformative visit, following an equally dynamic visit of the latest cohort of the Zin Fellows Leadership Program. This year, sixteen Halutz fellows from eleven countries arrived in Israel at a particularly critical moment. Their immersive experience provided them with a deeper understanding of BGU's importance to the Negev's recovery, as well as its groundbreaking research and innovation.

Since its inception, the Halutz Initiative has attracted participants from diverse professional backgrounds — entrepreneurs, investors, policymakers, and community leaders — united by a shared passion for Israel's future and BGU's pivotal role in shaping it. Each cohort returns home as ambassadors, sharing their insights and strengthening global engagement with Israel's innovative spirit. Their enthusiasm is contagious, often inspiring others to join the next generation of Halutz pioneers.

Friends Bring Friends

One of the most powerful aspects of the Halutz Initiative is how personal connections drive participation. Friends, colleagues, and mentors who have experienced the program firsthand become its strongest advocates, creating an ever-expanding network, extending the program's impact across borders and generations.

Jonathan Sacerdoti, a member of the first Halutz cohort, exemplifies this ripple effect. After his transformative experience, he nominated individuals for the second and third cohorts, who in turn recommended others. "I was delighted to become acquainted with BGU's work and community through my participation," he shares. "It was equally gratifying to introduce others whom I knew could serve as valuable ambassadors and friends of the University here in the UK. Knowing that BGU is investing in a forward-thinking initiative to cultivate a global network of leaders is truly reassuring. These efforts strengthen the essential connection between BGU and the wider world.”

“These efforts strengthen the essential connection between BGU and the wider world.”

One of his nominees, Maya Orr (UK Cohort III), recalls the profound impact of joining Halutz: “I am incredibly grateful. Since meeting the BGU team, I have discovered a deeper purpose within myself and found an entirely new community — one that I now consider family.”

Another of Jonathan’s nominees was Natalie Lancer (UK Cohort II), who in turn recommended Simon Walton (UK Cohort II); “After Natalie mentioned it to me, I looked up the agenda for the program and saw what a fantastic opportunity it was to visit the Negev in particular, learn more about BGU and meet new people from around the world” Simon added that he was “very happy that she introduced me to the BGU community. I formed some wonderful connections during the trip, and I hope I can contribute in the future.”

Mirko Garasic (Italy Cohort III) recommended Halutz to Alessio Pellegrino (Italy Cohort IV). Alessio recalls, “Mirko told me about Halutz over a wonderful lunch in Rome. He warmly encouraged me to take part, telling me it was a top-level initiative and that the connections and network it helps build are truly life-changing. I felt deeply touched and honored that Mirko thought of me!” What ultimately persuaded Alessio? “...As someone who is not Jewish, Israel had always seemed a distant country, mostly known for its conflicts. But I was completely captivated and immediately fell in love with its energy, its beauty, and the unbreakable spirit of the Israeli people. How could I turn down such an incredible opportunity?" Mirko reflects on his recommendation: "Alessio didn't need much persuading – and I certainly appreciate his love for knowledge, science and research, so BGU was a natural fit! In an era of misinformation – it's rewarding to help spread the truth." This ongoing cycle of engagement is at the heart of the Halutz initiative. Each recommendation expands its reach, deepening the bonds between BGU and a global community committed to Israel's future.

Beyond the Experience: A Lifelong Commitment

The Halutz Initiative extends far beyond the initial program — it sparks a lifelong connection. By immersing fellows in Israel's pioneering spirit, it equips them with the tools to drive change in their own communities. Many alumni have already assumed leadership roles in organizations supporting BGU and Israel. For example, Leora Hessen (South Africa – Cohort III), Tanya Golan (South Africa – Cohort III), and Daniel Yakcobi (South Africa – Cohort III) are all expected to join the BGU Board of Governors this year. Similarly, Simon Walton (Cohort II), Maya Orr (Cohort III), and Laura Foster (Cohort III) are set to join the board of BGU UK this summer. Meanwhile, Vanina Berly (Argentina – Cohort III) and Hernan Najenson (Argentina – Cohort II) are deepening their involvement in Argentina, and Ronie Terni (Brazil – Cohort III) has been organizing activities even though there is not an official associates organization in Brazil.

These examples represent just a fraction of the dedicated Halutz alumni making an impact worldwide. Many others continue to play crucial roles in strengthening BGU's global network, ensuring its mission endures.

A Call to Future Pioneers

For those who believe in Israel's potential to lead in sustainability, technology, and global problem-solving, Halutz offers a unique gateway to action. With each new cohort, the network expands, fostering a new generation of leaders dedicated to Israel's future.

BGU remains steadfast in its commitment to nurturing these leaders. Through the Halutz Initiative, the University not only advances its academic and research mission, but also reinforces the vision that the Negev — and Israel — will continue to flourish through collaboration, innovation, and the enduring power of human connection.

For more information or to express interest in joining a future cohort of the Halutz Initiative for Global Leadership or Zin Fellows, please contact your local BGU association. Because in shaping the future, friends bring friends — and together, they change the world.

Zin Fellows Program Bonds with the Negev

Each year, a select group of outstanding individuals embarks on a journey — not only across Israel's Negev desert, but into its future. The Zin Fellows Leadership Program, a flagship initiative of Americans for Ben-Gurion University, brings together rising Jewish community leaders from across the US for a deep, personal connection to Israel through the Negev.

Now in its seventh cohort, the program includes two domestic gatherings and a week-long seminar in Israel. Through direct engagement with Ben-Gurion University's faculty, students, and thought leaders, fellows explore the Negev's geography, history, and development challenges. Topics like climate resilience, diversity, innovation, and regional growth come to life in hands-on experiences and powerful conversations.

The latest seminar spanned from Tel Aviv to Eilat, with visits to Kibbutz Alumim, Hostage Square in Tel Aviv, and the Nova Festival Memorial. Fellows toured cutting-edge labs in marine biology, biomedicine, and desert agriculture — seeing firsthand how BGU research is shaping Israel's future.

Numerous Zin graduates have taken on leadership roles, including Gary DeBode, immediate past board chair, and Andrea Goren, current board chair of Americans for Ben-Gurion University. Beyond the itinerary, the Zin program fosters lasting bonds: to Israel, to BGU, and to a shared vision. Graduates return home not only as ambassadors for the Negev, but as lifelong partners in BGU's mission — to transform the desert into a beacon of knowledge, resilience, and opportunity.

The Ben-Gurion Awards 2024

In a year marked by profound loss and extraordinary resilience, the 2024 Ben-Gurion Award ceremony honored individuals and organizations embodying David Ben-Gurion's vision, inspiring hope, recovery, and transformation.

One of the most moving stories celebrated was that of Osnat Peri, Chair of Kibbutz Nir Oz and a survivor of the October 7 massacre. Osnat's unwavering dedication to rebuilding her shattered community after losing her husband, Chaim Peri, in an act of heroism, Osnat's relentless efforts to restore both Nir Oz's infrastructure and spirit have become a beacon of hope for the Negev and beyond.

Equally inspiring were the Friends of Noa Argamani, 12 BGU students who mobilized a global campaign advocating for Noa's release from Hamas captivity. For 246 days, they tirelessly engaged political, diplomatic, and media platforms. Noa was rescued in an Israeli military operation on June 8, 2024. Her emotional on-stage reunion with her friends symbolized the triumph of hope, and the power of collective action.

The ceremony also recognized other outstanding individuals and organizations:

- Dovi Frances, a financial technology innovator, BGU alumnus, supporter and board of governors member.
- ICA in Israel, the veteran British organization dedicated to developing Israel's periphery through education, settlement, science, and research.

...even in the most challenging times, the values of resilience, innovation, and unity can light the path forward.

- Orna Banai, a leading Israeli actress and comedian.
- Prof. Michal Shapira, BGU professor emerita of life sciences.
